Fund Description

The Lazard European Alternative Fund is a long/short equity fund with a strong focus on bottom-up stock selection aimed at delivering disproportionate positive returns given the risk taken. The Fund employs a robust risk management framework aimed at capital preservation. The portfolio comprises approximately 50-70 liquid European large and mid-cap companies.

Key Risks Related to the Fund

There is no capital guarantee or protection of the value of the Fund. The value of your investment and the income from it can go down as well as up and you may not get back the amount you originally invested.

There is a risk that the other side to certain contracts that the Fund may enter into may not be able to meet obligations. For example, this may arise in the Fund where an investment is made using a derivative or a debt instrument, and the other side to the agreement becomes insolvent, or is otherwise unable to meet its obligations. In such a case, the Fund may incur loss.

There are additional risks relating to the use of derivatives - the Fund invests in derivatives for the purposes of both reducing exposure (hedging) and also to gain greater exposure to underlying investments. The use of derivatives can increase the possibility for profit but also increase the risk of loss.

Key Risks Related to the Share Class

Shareholders who acquire shares after commencement of a performance period may be liable for a performance fee, even where there has not been an appreciation of performance of the relevant share class during the period in which those shares were actually held. Performance fees may be paid on unrealised gains which may subsequently never be realised.

The returns from your investment may be affected by changes in the exchange rate between the Fund's base currency, the currency of the Fund's investments, your share class and your home currency.

See "Risk Factors" in the UCITS' Prospectus and Fund Supplement for more information about risks.

This Fund is actively managed. The Fund's performance is measured against the performance of the MSCI Europe Net Total Return Index (the "Benchmark"), which the Investment Manager has assessed to be the most appropriate Benchmark for measuring performance. The Fund is not constrained by the Benchmark as it has flexibility to invest in securities and asset classes not included in the Benchmark.

Commentary

In June, the Lazard European Alternative Fund (LEAF) returned +0.11% net of fees in the 'S' Acc euro share class, compared to -1.30% for the MSCI Europe Total Return Index.

Month end gross exposure increased to 136% and net exposure increased to 25%.

Our long book delivered -63 basis points (bps) in June while our short book compensated for this by delivering +80bps, of which +46bps came from hedges and cash and +34bps from single-name shorts. On the long side, we made +24bps in Siemens Energy. We had no notable losses (>20bps) to report in the long book. On the short side, we had no significant gains (>20bps) to report although we lost -28bps in a semiconductor company.

In June, European equity markets underperformed relative to the US as the macro-economic data continued to suggest that the US economy was broadly resilient, and that there were few signs of tariffs having impacted inflation yet. Currency moves also played a role as a weak US dollar has been tailwind for internationally focused US corporate earnings while a stronger euro has been a headwind for many internationally facing European companies. Elsewhere, geopolitics influenced market sentiment with significant oil price volatility experienced after Israel launched attacks on Iran's nuclear facilities in June, although a ceasefire was agreed shortly after.

As we enter the third quarter, we anticipate that news surrounding tariffs will continue to dominate discussions as final negotiations between the US and its trading partners are likely to extend beyond the originally agreed timelines. With 30% tariffs on China and 10% tariffs on other countries, the US is already positioned to generate approximately $400 billion in annual revenue for taxpayers. This places the US in a strong position to adopt a patient approach in securing favourable trade agreements. At the time of writing, the tariff notices issued by the US appear to effectively push back the July 9 deadline to August 1, providing additional time for negotiations to unfold.

For the US, the debate now centres on the potential consequences of tariffs. Will economic growth slow significantly? Will inflation surge? Or, as was the case in 2018, will the impact of tariffs ultimately prove minimal? In 2018, a strengthening dollar helped offset tariff-driven price increases, mitigating some of the effects. However, this time around, the dollar has weakened, eliminating that offset. Tariffs can certainly drive short-term inflation in goods as prices adjust, but it's important to note that goods make up only a quarter of the US CPI basket. The other two major components—rents and services—both appear to be trending lower, which may help to temper inflationary pressures overall.

Undoubtedly, with companies slowing hiring and postponing capital expenditures in response to the tariff uncertainty during the first half of the year, a few weaker-than-expected nonfarm payroll prints seem plausible. But will this signal a significant turning point for the US economy? We think it is unlikely. The passage of the US tax bill has given clarity to corporates, particularly around the accelerated depreciation of capital expenditures and favourable tax treatment over the next few years. As a result, we may see the US capex cycle start to pick up in the coming months. Additionally, any resolution or progress on trade agreements would likely reduce uncertainty, which could immediately boost business planning, employment, and financial markets. That said, on the consumer front, outcomes may differ across income groups. Lower-income households are likely to feel the brunt of the tariffs, with less insulation from the wealth effect and disproportionately higher burdens from the tax bill. Meanwhile, middle- and higher-income consumers, who are better positioned to weather these challenges, are likely to remain key drivers of consumer spending and overall economic growth in the US.

In Europe, the growth narrative is increasingly tied to fiscal spending. Germany's fiscal stimulus is likely to start influencing economic data from the fourth quarter, especially with bond issuance being front loaded. In addition to this, the European Central Bank has already cut interest rates considerably, with the effects of monetary easing already starting to influence the economy. Notably, construction confidence, even in Germany, has inflected higher as interest rates have declined. Lastly on the EU consumer, savings rates have risen to very high levels over the past two years. A combination of factors, including the boost in sentiment from German fiscal spending, rising real wages, and lower costs for oil, natural gas, and electricity, could finally encourage European consumers to increase spending.

Whilst the equity volatility index (VIX) has dropped significantly from the elevated levels seen after the unveiling of reciprocal tariffs by the US in early April, sector-specific volatility remains extremely high. This creates a favourable environment for stock picking on both the long and short sides. Our investment process which focuses on fundamental stock selection while keeping valuation as a core consideration, allows us to navigate this dynamic market effectively. It enables us to trade in and out of positions with agility, avoiding entrapment in purely momentum-driven or value-oriented trades.
