NEWSLETTER MARCH 2025

TIKEHAU SHORT DURATION – F-DIS-EUR

MARKET OUTLOOK

Geopolitics. The US trade war remains at the heart of financial market concerns. The introduction of 25% tariffs on Canada and Mexico, additional taxes on China and global tariffs on steel, aluminum, the automotive industry and its components illustrate this protectionist policy. On April 2, designated as "Liberation Day", Donald Trump will announce reciprocal tariffs, although details are still limited. However, the number of countries affected is likely to be significant. In response, many states, including European ones, have expressed their intention to take retaliatory measures.

Economics and politics. Uncertainty surrounding US trade policy is weighing on economic indicators, fuelling fears of a stagflation scenario in the US, characterized by high inflation without growth. US inflation is struggling to come down (CPI at 2.8% year-on-year at the end of February), while the ISM services price index stands at 62.6, signalling a marked rise in February. At the same time, economic activity indices, although in expansionary territory, reflect a clear slowdown. Consumer confidence reached its lowest level since January 2021. In Europe, inflation continued to fall to 2.3% year-on-year, enabling the ECB to cut its key rates again in March, to 2.5%. Nevertheless, the major event of the month was the announcement of vast fiscal stimulus packages, notably for the defense sector.

Market performance. Market sentiment was generally negative in March, affecting all asset classes. Global equities retreated, with declines of -3.94% for the Eurostoxx 50 and -5.75% for the S&P 500, although the defense sector posted strong performances, illustrated by Rheinmetall's +31.05% rise. The credit market also recorded a decline, for both Investment Grade (-0.93%, ER000®) and High Yield (-0.99%, HEC00®). This trend can be explained by the increase in risk premiums (+5bps for Investment Grade and +39bps for High Yield) and by the steepening of yield curves, induced by the rise in long rates. Despite considerable volatility, European short-term rates ended the month close to their end-February levels, as did the German 2-year rate, which rose by just 2bps, although fluctuations of over 20bps were observed. On the other hand, long rates rose sharply, with the German 10-year rate appreciating by 33bps in March, driven by fiscal stimulus announcements that will increase government deficits and financing requirements. In the United States, the yield curve also steepened, but due to a fall in short-term rates, reflecting expectations of monetary easing by the Fed in the face of economic slowdown, despite persistent inflation. Long rates, meanwhile, remained stable (-11bps on the 2-year, no change on the 10-year).

Positioning. Tikehau Short Duration posted a stable performance in March, underperforming the Investment Grade 1-3 year index (ER01®, +0.11%) but outperforming the High Yield 1-3 year index (H1EC®, -0.29%). This underperformance relative to the Investment Grade index is explained by a shorter duration, while short rates have fallen slightly, and by a greater widening of risk premiums on High Yield than on Investment Grade. The portfolio, 25% invested in short-duration corporate high-yield bonds, was impacted by these developments. We took advantage of the rise in rates at the beginning of the month to increase the portfolio's duration from 0.9 to 1 year. In addition, we increased our High Yield exposure in very short-dated securities maturing in 2025, identified as attractive opportunities in the current environment.
